Passing Place alters between two different timeperiods; the contemporary and the historic period around 1920.

It is also possible to say that the performance alters between two different or opposite zones of perception; a dreamy hallucinatory place in contrast to a very real contemporary and concrete place where it is possible to talk directly to the public.

It is a poetic performance where a sequence of scenes are interconnected through a parallel story guided by piano compositions performed live, electronic music, impressive soundscapes and real time projections.
